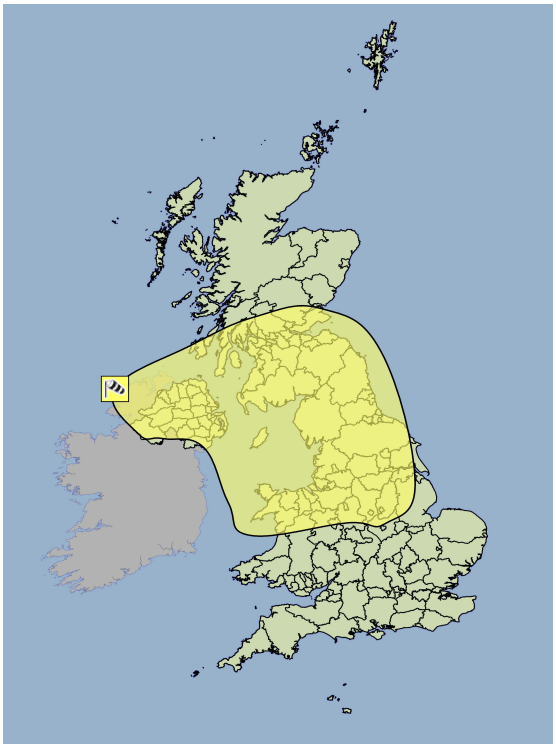
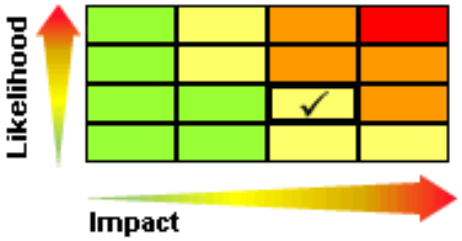
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deep depression to the north of Scotland will bring a squally cold front southeast across the country on Friday night and Saturday morning. The strongest winds are likely to occur briefly on the passage of the front, or over a period of several hours over and to the lee of high ground, which could bring very strong crosswinds to the A1 and M1.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 18:20 on Fri, 09th Jan 2015 until 08:00 on Sat, 10th Jan 2015

West to southwesterly winds will increase to bring gusts of 50-60 mph, with the risk of local 70-80 mph, the greatest risk of these stronger winds over Northern England. The public should be aware of the risk of fallen trees, structural damage and disruption to transport.
